FOSTER

Open your home for a short period of time to help foster kittens that need a little extra support or socialization. They can stay in a spare bedroom or bathroom. It's a very rewarding experience and helps relieve stress!

What's it like to foster?

What I've found rewarding about fostering is the transformation, the A-HA moment. The moment I know they're going to be okay and they know it too. I've fostered orphan kittens who I wasn't sure would survive beyond a few hours and witnessed them thrive as healthy, strong, sassy cats. I've seen scared fosters play with toys for the first time or finally trust me enough to take a nap with me.

Fostering saves lives.

- Jennifer C., Cat and Dog Foster

After about six years, I am still fostering and currently have Pippen and Poppy, who give me lots of love. Watching them play energetically and happily despite their blindness is so rewarding. I more often foster moms and newborns, who appreciate a safe, quiet nursery to grow in. Fostering is a way to protect, nurture, and socialize Paws cats while creating space at the shelter for other animals in need. On a more selfish level, through fostering, I always have kittens to love, laugh at, and play with. Letting them go is hard, but then another furry family arrives.

After a year in our care,
Carter found his furever!

October 2019

November 2020

Carter came into our care as a very tiny, very sick kitten in October 2019. He was literally hanging on by a thread. He immediately went to a wonderful foster home where his foster mom, Judy, gave him around the clock care and lots of love. Because of her dedication, Carter survived.

As Carter grew into a healthy kitten, we noticed that he made a frequent snoring sound. Judy took him to lots of veterinary appointments and gave him various prescribed medications, but it never went away. We learned that it was Stridor and that it would be something that Carter would have to live with. Despite this, he continued to be a very playful kitten.

After a year of being in our care, and receiving so much love from Judy and other shelter volunteers, Carter found his forever family this past December.
